The polo that survives the line.

A polo is the most-worn piece of company gear — it has to take a wash cycle, a fryer line, and a chest-brand hoop without falling apart. We stock the four families that actually hold up: pique cotton, performance knits, soft-touch retail, and tall sizes.

Hats stay on. Vests come off at lunch.

On a job site, the cap is the brand asset that walks past every coffee stop and gas pump for four years. We carry the structured Richardson 112, the relaxed Yupoong family, and the workhorse Carhartt cotton canvas.

Built for the way California actually weathers.

Soft shells for the marine layer, duck-canvas jackets for the job site, packable rain shells for the open-house run. Embroidered chest, embroidered sleeve, or both — outerwear earns the brand impression because people wear it for hours.

The hoodie a customer keeps for five winters.

Mid-weight fleece, full-zip jackets, pullover hoodies. Embroidery survives every wash; the fabric needs to be worth that survival. We stock heavyweight Gildan for retail crews and Carhartt midweight for the field.

Real estate, hospitality, the open-house uniform.

Easy-care poplin and twill shirts with the kind of structure embroidery wants — thick enough to hold a chest brand without showing the backing. Long sleeve for the office, short sleeve for the showing.

When print is the right answer.

Cotton tees for the giveaway run, performance tees for the team event, heavyweight workwear tees for the crew that actually puts in hours. Most we print; some we embroider when the chest hit makes sense.

Brand impressions, on the move.

Tool bags, duffels, totes, backpacks. The least-thought-about brand surface and one of the most-seen — your name on a bag goes places people remember.

Aprons, blankets, towels, the small stuff.

The pieces nobody else thinks to brand. An apron at a tasting room, a blanket on a foundation gala chair, a towel in a fitness studio cubby. Small stitch counts, big presence.
